

Silhouette newsletter

Minimalism
&
Maximalism

DECEMBER

EDITION

Hriday Thakur

 @hridaythecreator

PopBoard

A hand-painted, maximalist standee created using acrylic on wood, designed to visually announce and celebrate Silhouette's Art Gallery. Built through hours of layered detailing, bold color choices, intricate borders, and expressive typography, the artwork embraces maximalism in its truest form—where every inch tells a story and excess becomes expression. Inspired by Indian folk visuals and street aesthetics, the piece rejects minimal restraint and instead thrives on richness, energy, and visual noise. More than a promotional board, it stands as a labor-intensive artwork that reflects the spirit of Silhouette: vibrant, unapologetic, and deeply rooted in creative storytelling.

Veeresh Rajput

Too Much to See

The artwork explores the tension between stillness and overload through a powerful visual contrast. On one side, a simple chair sits alone in an open, empty space, symbolizing calm, grounding, and the possibility of mental clarity. The chair represents presence and rest—a moment where the mind can pause without demand or intrusion. As the composition progresses toward the opposite side, this sense of quiet is gradually disrupted. The chair becomes engulfed by repeating eyes, hands, and dense, chaotic patterns. These elements evoke constant observation, endless expectations, and the relentless pull of external stimuli. The repetition creates a feeling of pressure and suffocation, mirroring how modern life floods the mind with information, opinions, and distractions.

Nishtha Priya

📷 @art_by_nash_

As an artist, I love exploring new forms, though I'll admit, I sometimes leave a few creative experiments unfinished. But that's the beauty of art: it's about trying, exploring, and learning through the process. I use drawing as a way to understand people, emotions, and the spaces in between. My work moves between simple line drawings and more detailed ink and graphite pieces, depending on what the idea asks for. I am interested in the human form, thoughts, and little symbols that reveal much about a bigger narrative. Rather than clarify, I prefer to leave my drawings somewhat open to interpretation, giving the viewer a chance to take a second look.

Several Ways of Being

Between Sun and Moon,

Nebula Within the Veins

Divya Saini

I am an artist drawn to the quiet spaces within the human mind and body. My work explores inner awareness, emotion, and identity as living, moving forces rather than fixed ideas. Through introspective imagery, I aim to blur the line between what is seen and what is felt, creating pieces that invite stillness, reflection, and self-recognition.

The artwork shows a person carrying an entire inner universe within themselves, where thoughts and feelings flow naturally, making the human body feel deeply connected to something infinite and alive.

Jia Jain

Solar Mood

I'm an artist who loves turning emotions, thoughts, and tiny bits of chaos into colorful, expressive worlds. My work blends whimsy with feeling, often giving ordinary things a voice, a mood, or a personality of their own.

@jammyy_draws

@art.jammyj

India: One Spirit, Many Symbols

Ashika gupta

India: One Spirit, Many Symbols" Short Description: This artwork weaves India's identity into a single frame—heritage, courage, nature, and unity. Centered around the iconic arch, it brings together national symbols like the tricolour, Ashoka Chakra, tiger, peacock, and lotus, along with the silent salute of a soldier. The intricate patterns reflect India's diversity, while the monochrome tones emphasize strength, resilience, and timeless pride in the nation's soul.

Riddima Singh

 @Riddima.draws

I'm a freestyle artist, letting my brush guide me as I translate my inner feelings onto the canvas—exploring Lord Krishna not just as a deity, but as an energy of rhythm, freedom, and quiet confidence.

The divine: Hari Krishna

This painting is my personal interpretation of Lord Krishna—not just as a deity, but as an energy of rhythm, freedom, and quiet confidence. The flowing blues reflect calm and depth, while the gold accents bring in warmth, charm, and a playful brilliance—traits I strongly resonate with. Krishna absorbed in music mirrors my own tendency to lose track of time when I'm creating, thinking, or imagining. The movement in the fabric and the glowing circular backdrop symbolize balance: tradition meeting individuality, discipline blending with spontaneity.

Aditi Singhal

The Blue Soul of Rain

This artwork shows a beautifully detailed drawing of a bird sitting quietly on a wooden post in the rain. The bird is painted mainly in shades of blue, with touches of yellow, orange, and red around its neck and chest, which makes it look lively and eye-catching. Its sharp beak and calm, observant eye give the bird a thoughtful and peaceful expression. The light blue lines in the background suggest falling rain, adding a gentle, calm mood to the scene.

Kanishka

Stillness

This artwork represents minimalism through limited color, repetition, and intentional use of negative space. The composition relies on simple forms and a restrained black-and-white palette to create balance and calm. By reducing visual elements and focusing on clarity and structure, the artwork emphasizes how simplicity and repetition can communicate depth without excess.

Ridhima Rastogi

 Artsy_.rr

Strength in Restraint

Hi, I'm Ridhima, someone who enjoys expressing emotions and ideas through drawing. I believe art doesn't always need to be perfect, it needs to be honest.

Somen Pramanik

Shattered Serenity

A minimal pencil sketch of a woman in profile, combined with sharp geometric shapes and a clock around her neck. The artwork symbolizes time, identity, and inner reflection through a blend of realism and abstraction.

Usnik Mondal

 usk_otsutsuki

Berserk Armour

I'm Uskin, a pen-and-ink artist inspired by manga, architecture, and emotionally intense moments. My work focuses on strong linework, contrast, and storytelling through still frames, capturing solitude, movement, and inner conflict.

Kanak Mehra Sahej

Arunima Agrawal

I am a BA liberal arts student major in economics and I love art

Wing-it

Extremity of human thoughts and how they draw us deeper in it

Wings of Tranquility

Painted in watercolor, this butterfly symbolizes transformation and quiet freedom. Flowing shades of blue and violet create a sense of movement and serenity, celebrating change and the beauty of fleeting moments.

Devotion in Color :

A symbolic portrayal inspired by Indian mythology, this artwork expresses devotion through vibrant colors and gentle forms. The intimate bond between the radha rani and the peacock represents beauty, spirituality, and harmony with nature, while the surrounding red flowers transform the image into a visual offering.

Aashi Gupta

Chahat Gautam

Title: Fragments in Restraint

Disjointed facial forms float in deliberate silence, shaped by minimal lines and open space, while dense strokes, shadows, and vertical rhythms introduce maximalist tension.

Title: Minimal Instinct, Maximal Soul

Rendered in a restrained monochrome palette, the wolf emerges from simplicity through an abundance of flowing lines and textured strokes. The minimal background sharpens its presence, while the maximal detailing of fur and motion reveals raw instinct, strength, and untamed emotion where restraint frames intensity.

Kavisha Asrani

Kathakali Mandala

A timeless Kathakali mandala artwork portraying a divine green-faced noble character, adorned with an eternally ornate crown, intricate sacred geometric patterns, bold traditional makeup, and vibrant cultural motifs evoking ancient Indian heritage and spiritual serenity.

Suhani Jain

Midnight Serenity

A serene night landscape with a glowing river beneath a star-filled sky, featuring soft nebula hues and floating lotus flowers that create a calm, dreamlike atmosphere.

Hrishit Vats

The Softest Form of Chaos

This image exists at the intersection of minimalism and maximalism. Its composition is restrained, using soft lines and open space to create visual calm. Within this minimal exterior, however, unfolds a quiet chaos of thought and imagination. The book covering the eyes opens into a forest, symbolizing how ideas grow, multiply, and take unexpected forms. What appears simple on the surface holds layered emotional depth within. The calm expression reflects balance—where chaos is not loud or overwhelming, but gentle, organic, and deeply internal.

Go follow our instagram for more creative artworks

@SILHOUETTE_BU

Designed & Edited By Tanishka Gupta
Hriday Thakur

