SURREALISM

February
Edition

IT WAITS BENEATH

Fear doesn't always chase. It waits - still, patient, certain. There's something more terrifying about what doesn't rush you... what allows you to come closer on your own. The silence grows heavier the nearer you get, like it already knows how this ends. And maybe the fear isn't in what's ahead but in realising you were never meant to turn back.

KANAK MEHRA

I'm Kanak Mehra, an emerging artist with formal training who enjoys exploring different styles and ideas through my work. I'm interested in both traditional and modern art, and I like understanding the background and theory behind what I create. My approach is simple- learning, experimenting, and slowly building a style that feels personal to me. I enjoy trying new techniques while also drawing from what I've studied, and with each piece, I continue to grow and express my thoughts in a more refined way.

DRESSED FOR THE END

Not everything terrifying looks broken. Some things hold themselves together with unsettling grace. There's a strange calm in standing face to face with the inevitable— not peace, not acceptance... just a quiet composure. Fear doesn't always unravel you. Sometimes it teaches you how to carry it without trembling. And in that stillness, something about the end almost feels... beautiful.

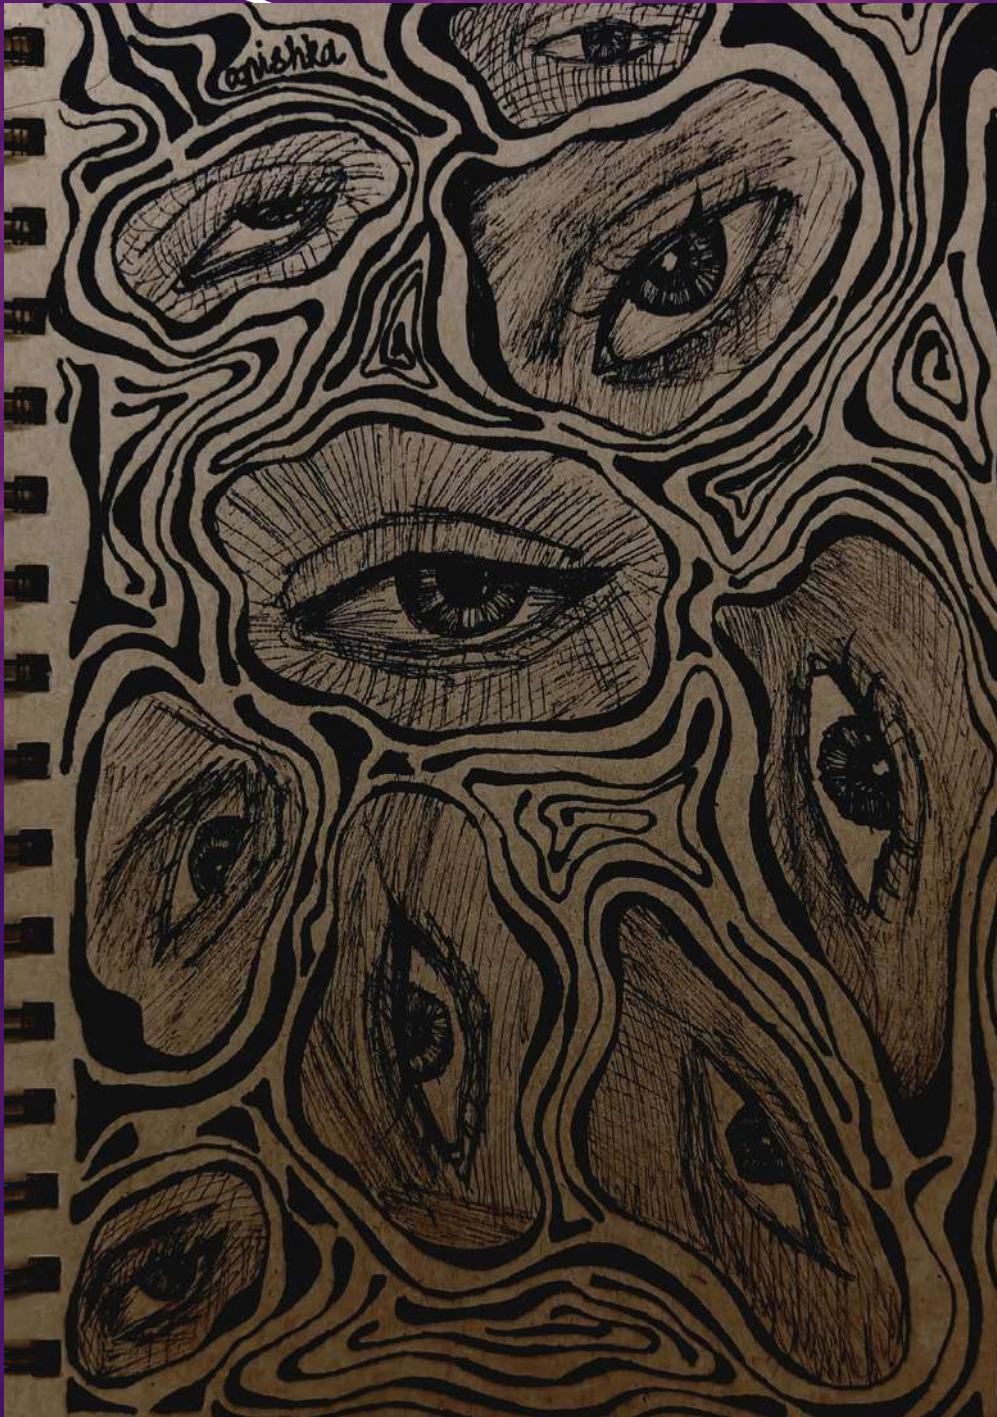

WATCHING THOUGHTS

This surrealist artwork explores perception and the subconscious mind through distorted eyes and flowing abstract patterns. The swirling lines represent thoughts and emotions, while the eyes symbolize awareness and observation. The composition reflects how the mind continuously watches, interprets, and transforms reality in unusual ways.

FRAGMENTS OF THE UNSEEN MIND

This surrealist artwork explores the idea of the subconscious mind through repeating eyes and flowing organic shapes. The eyes symbolize awareness, observation, and hidden thoughts, while the distorted forms represent the mysterious and fragmented nature of the human psyche. The composition suggests that the mind constantly watches, questions, and interprets reality in multiple ways.

THE SILENT ASCENT

Carved into a lonely cliff, this settlement rises like a scar against the landscape. Each structure clings desperately to the rock, connected by fragile paths and worn steps. Travelers speak of it rarely—those who climb never stay long, and those who stay are never seen descending.

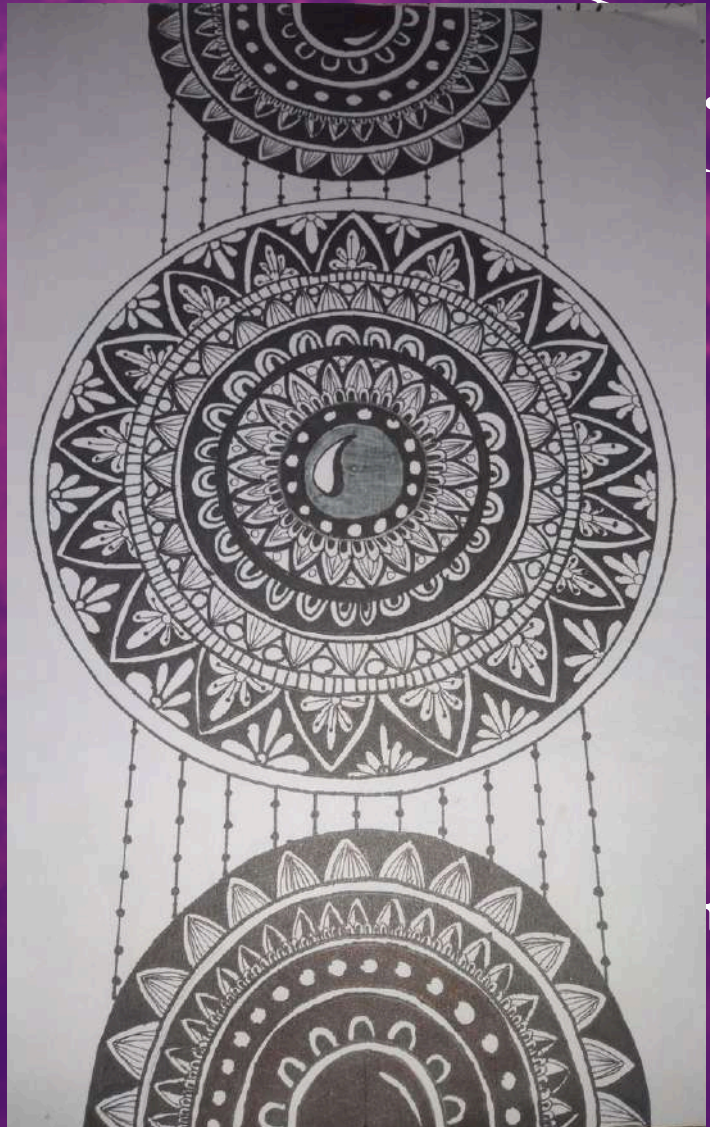

USNIK MONDAL

I'm Usnik, a pen-and-ink artist inspired by manga, architecture, and emotionally intense moments. My work focuses on strong linework, contrast, and storytelling through still frames, capturing solitude, movement, and inner conflict.

ECHOES OF A DREAM

This artwork gives a surreal feeling because of its dreamy and imaginative design. The detailed circular patterns and hanging elements make it look calm, yet mysterious, as if it belongs to a dream rather than real life. It beautifully blends reality with imagination and creates a peaceful, almost magical effect.

RIYA KAPOOR

@riyakreativ

I am someone who enjoys turning ideas and emotions into art. I love adding detail and meaning to my work, and I am often inspired by imagination, calmness, and mystery. Through my artwork, I try to create a space where reality and dreams come together.

CHAHAT GAUTAM

I create art inspired by quiet emotions, overthinking, and the things left unsaid. My work explores the balance between light and darkness, strength and vulnerability, using minimal color and expressive forms. Through my art, I aim to turn complex feelings into something meaningful—reminding others that even in heavy moments, there's beauty, growth, and a sense of being understood.

THE LAST FLAME I HOLD

A striking contrast of black, white, and crimson captures a moment of tension between control and resistance. The faceless figure, bound by sharp, web-like strands, reaches toward a fragile flame, symbolizing hope, identity, or freedom—just beyond full grasp. The dripping red threads feel both like confinement and connection, blurring the line between pain and power. Minimal yet intense, the piece speaks of struggle, resilience, and the quiet defiance of still reaching forward despite being held back.

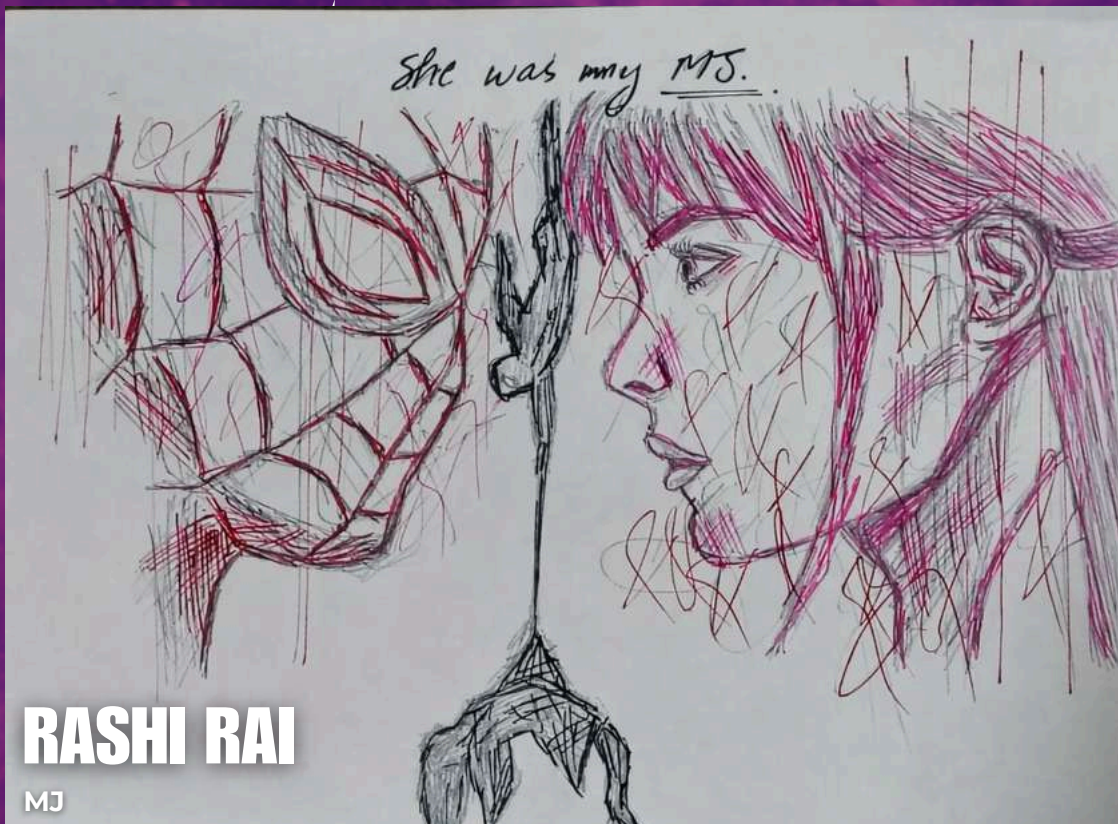

THE WEIGHT BENEATH SILENCE

A soft yet haunting illustration of a girl, suspended in silence, her body curled inward as if trying to protect herself from the shadows below. Delicate linework and smooth shading contrast against the deep, engulfing darkness, where reaching hands stretch upward—symbolizing inner fears, anxiety, or the weight of unseen struggles. The flowing hair and gentle expression add a sense of vulnerability, making the piece feel both fragile and powerful, like a quiet battle between light and overwhelming thoughts.

SILENCE THAT SCREAMS

A figure sits folded into itself, head buried, hands gripping what feels like a storm instead of hair. The body is present, but the identity dissolves into darkness—like thoughts too heavy to hold shape. The sharp contrast of light and shadow captures the quiet violence of overthinking, where emotions are not seen but deeply felt.

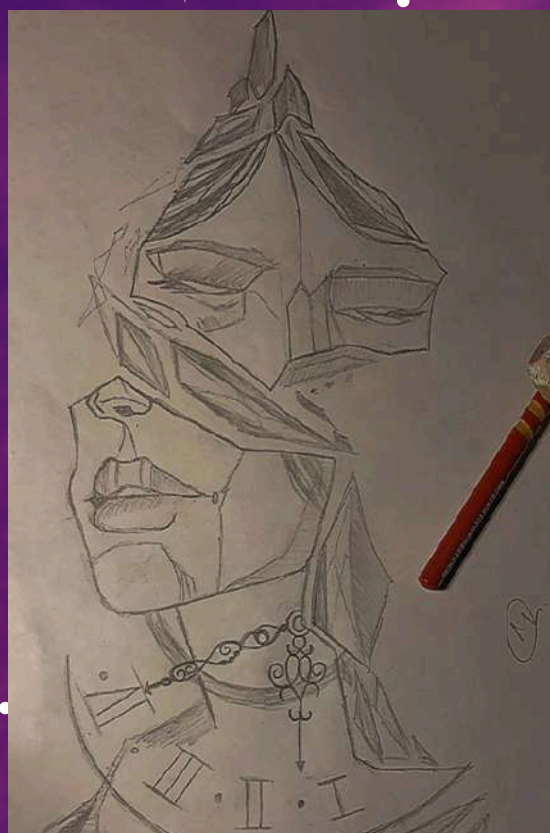

Mokshika Kapil

FRAGMENTS OF TIME

The artwork shows, the complexity and fragmentation of identity. The closed eyes convey introspection, as if the figure is lost within its own thoughts and how experiences and emotions divide and reshape our sense of self

FRACTURED REALITY!

When reality slowly slips away... and chaos just takes over. The city starts breaking apart into a dream—floating, glowing, not really making sense... but still feeling just right. A place where nothing needs to be explained, and everything simply exists! Somewhere between reality and a fantasy I'd rather be in

NAIRA

My art is my way of disappearing for a while... into something softer, stranger, and chaotic. My art is basically my mind... just in colors!
